ESET NOD32 Antivirus 4.0.314 FULL Licencia Hasta 2050 Get for free with Tonight on DC Legends of Tomorrow, the Legends make a daring plan to take out Snart. And, for the first time in their history, they assemble into two teams to attempt this — and all hell breaks loose. There was a lot of goodness in tonight's episode of Legends, but the best bit was when the leaders of the group, Ray and Zari, finally had their first proper family fight. Which you'd think would be a big, big deal, but is probably only a big, big deal in comic book movies. In this episode, fans of the show can witness the first real break in their loyalties, and Ray tells Zari, "I'm being honest, I'm not going to let myself be manipulated by you anymore." This is supposed to represent the fact that even though they're trying to be a family, there's still much mistrust and resentment between the group.

After all, they've barely seen each other for centuries, so it's hard to know what will go where. However, it's particularly interesting to me, because Ray's statement is coming from the place of honesty, whereas Zari's is coming from fear. She's not worried that he's going to manipulate her, but that he's not going to need her anymore once he figures out his plan. So, instead of saying "I'm not going to let you manipulate me," he's letting her know that he's willing to remove himself from her life — and that, presumably, means he's never going to need her, and is free to use her as an independent force with his crew. Many women, particularly the ones who don't hold power, are afraid of being abandoned in the same way. One main character with a good deal of power will eventually turn on you, and then what will you do? Of course, Ray may never have a true power struggle with her, since she represents his light and might, but it's a thought. Watch Legends of Tomorrow on Tuesday nights at 8 p.m.
